Dear Valued Reader,

Welcome to the July edition of The Inside Scoop! In this mailer we take a look at the "ins and outs" of employing whistleblowing systems in the workplace and answer some of your most pressing questions.

Whistle Blowers is an independent subscription service that is designed to provide employees with the means to anonymously "blow the whistle" on fraud, criminal activity and other irregularities in the workplace. Do you know that, potentially, a company's potentially biggest enemy is not its clients, service providers or suppliers, but its own employees? The impact of internal criminal activity is still highly underestimated by South African businesses and should not be overlooked.

How effective are whistleblowing systems?

The effectiveness of the so-called "hotline or fraud line" in gathering vitally important information on wrong doing or detrimental behaviour in the workplace is significant. But what are the "ins and outs" of installing such a system?

Q. Are the calls recorded?

A. Yes, all calls are recorded.

Q. Are the recordings made available to anyone?

A. No, the recordings are for the sole use of Whistle Blowers personnel, for reference purposes. It is too risky to allow anyone, even the client, to listen to the recordings, as they may recognise the voice of a caller, possibly exposing the caller's identity.

Q. Can subscribers visit the call centre ?

A. No, the call centre address is confidential as the employees who work there have to be protected.

Q. How do we know that the call centre personnel will keep information confidential?

A. Strict selection criteria and background checks are utilised in the selection process. Management also reserves the right to subject operators to profile audits and truth verification testing to determine their continued honesty and integrity.

Q. Can my call be traced by the call centre ?

A. With technological advances, there is an obvious risk of tracing calls back to the caller. However, as each client is provided with a free-call number, the caller can make the call from anywhere at no cost, thus making it more difficult to trace it back to a specific person.

Q. Surely there are hoax calls. How are these exposed?

A. By thoroughly questioning the caller to obtain maximum information, experienced operators would soon detect if the caller was phoning in to falsely accuse someone against whom he bears a grudge. Call centre staff make every attempt to qualify all information received before reporting back to the client, as well as providing advice on how the situation should be handled.

Q. Does the concept have any incentive attached to it?

A. No, our company does not attach any incentive to this at all. We maintain that the mere implementation and utilisation of the concept brings about the following, which we consider as adequate incentives:

- Employment security
- Ensuring the continued existence of the company
- Transparency in the workplace
- Honesty
- The possibility that the company will expand and in so doing, create more employment opportunities
- Contributing towards creating a stable economic climate to encourage international investment
- Combating poverty

(We are prepared to facilitate the payment of a reward should the company deem it necessary to do so. The initiative to make this decision is left entirely up to the relevant client company).

Q. Are whistle blowers protected by the law in any way?

A. Yes, they are protected from unfair discrimination, recrimination, occupational detriment, harassment, threats, etc.

- The Protected Disclosures Act (2000)
- The Promotion of Equality and Prevention of Unfair Discrimination Act (2000)
- The Labour Relations Act (Schedule 8 "Code of Good Practice")

Thank you for taking the time to read The Inside Scoop. Should you have any further questions regarding whistleblowing or other security related queries, please feel free to give us a call or drop us a line.
