

Justicia halts fuel tanker hijackings worth more than R350-million

Trucking companies have lost up to R350-million in stolen fuel to a blue light syndicate operating between Durban and Gauteng, Conrad van der Merwe, Gauteng regional director, of Justicia Investigations, has revealed.

"As fuel becomes increasingly expensive, the many petrol tankers plying the route between Durban and Johannesburg will become increasingly attractive targets.

"Already, between January and July this year, our investigators came to know of at least 35 different incidents. However, there have probably been more given that between 40 and 50 fuel tankers are on the highway on any single day," he says.

At present, Gauteng consumes 65 per cent of the fuel in the country. The bulk of this is either imported or refined by Engen or Sapref, two of the country's largest oil refineries. Most is transported by road. Unfortunately, the multi-billion rand New Multi Product Pipeline, which is still under construction by Transnet, and would be the safest means of transporting petrol and diesel, is not yet fully operational.

Although Justicia investigates a wide variety of different crimes, and has come across tankers stolen in Durban, emptied and abandoned, he says the blue light syndicate that investigators exposed operating along the N3 in August, was one of the more sophisticated. Most of these tanker hijackings took place within 150 kilometres of Johannesburg. Vehicles were carrying petrol, diesel and paraffin.

According to Mr van der Merwe, the syndicate used white unmarked vehicles with blue lights. After a truck was pulled over, and a suspect wearing an SAPS uniform overpowered, or took the driver hostage, accomplices wearing plain clothes appeared. They used cable ties to tie up the driver.

He was placed in the boot of their vehicle. In other cases, drivers of fuel tankers were hijacked after they went to the toilet or shops at some of the ultra cities close to Johannesburg.

"As the driver climbed into his truck, he would feel a gun in his back and would be forced to climb into the cab and lie on the sleep bunk. He was then tied up and robbed of his cellphone and wallet," said Mr van der Merwe.

The tracker signal of the truck was blocked using an advanced jamming device and the truck was then driven to the offload point which, in this case, was on a farm in the Springs area. Here, the diesel, or petrol, was pumped into large 30 000 litre containers.

The truck and trailer was then driven back to Johannesburg and dumped while the driver was dropped off in a rural area in the Leandra/Delmas area, where he would be left to struggle for an hour or two before making his way to the nearest police station to report the incident.

He added that horses and empty trailers were eventually discovered a few days after an incident at different locations in Johannesburg. He said that owners of the ensembles, of which the horse alone was worth around R1,5-million, were fortunate to recover their vehicles.

"In all cases, the drivers were robbed of their cellphones and wallets. Polygraph tests performed during this thorough investigation confirmed they were not involved in the planning or execution of these hijackings in any way," continues Mr van der Merwe.

Justicia, assisted by the tracking company responsible for five trucks owned by a small trucking company, was able to locate the farm that was used to store the stolen petrol and diesel.

Seals found on the premises indicated that numerous loads of stolen petrol and diesel were offloaded on this farm. The tenant, who was responsible for selling the stolen fuel to a wholesaler, was arrested.

Further investigations led to the arrest of the leader of the hijacking team. It was found that that he was out on bail on numerous charges of hijacking, and even murder. He was positively identified by drivers during identification parades and has been charged with numerous fuel truck hijackings in Gauteng.
